By IRWIN M. HOWE.

Boston, Mass., October 12.—(Special.)

In the second inning of today's game Hank Gowdy drove the ball into that section of the bleachers reserved for the Royal Rooters in left field, and scored Maranville with the run that won the game.

The big catcher of the Braves was still to be reckoned with.

This was a game of sensations, of which Gowdy's hitting and Evers' misplaying were the most prominent. The best play of the game, and one that may have been the real turning point of the game, was when Evers came late in the eighth inning and was stopped by Schmidt of a terrific wallop by Bush to start the eighth

In the tenth, after the Athletics had scored two runs, he hit a home run into the right field seats, and coming up first in the twelfth, he again doubled into the roosters' section.

Gilbert, batting for James, walked, and Mann was put on to run for Gowdy, and immediately made a winning run on Moran's punt, which Bush then

The ball went between Schmidt and the bag and the big fellow actually ran over it. He, however, made a quick scoop and got it back to Tyler at first in time to retire the runner.

The Constitution's sport stories and comment are better, to my mind, than the columns of stock perpetration by Hugh Fullerton, Damon Runyon, Hoseam Buller or any of the others, whose superior writing is a matter of course.

Their dope is well, inclined to be prejudicial and their predictions always miss the mark. They prophesy like the Indians shoot—with both eyes shut and a prayer.

But your articles are always strong.
